The section of the new Bill which would have directly applied to Rustomjee's case, however, is that which provides that a bankrupt shall be held guilty of a misdeameanour if the assets do not amount to 50 per cent. on his unsecured debts, unless the jury is satisfied that the insolvency arose from misfortune unaccompanied by dishonesty or reckless speculation or extravagance on his part. No jury could have found that Rustomiee's backruptcy was unaccompanied by reckless speculation, if indeed they could have acquitted him of dishonesty, taking into consideration his failure to keep proper books of account and his inability or refusual to give any explanation as to some $40,000 drawn from the bank by cheques in his own favour. Rustomier, as already mentioned, was a bankrupt in 1876; he then leaves the Colony apparently penniless, returns in a few years, maintains an expensive domestic establishment, and enters on share speculations to the extent of milpared to book orders for prompt or forward lions of dollars, thereby, in the words of debts and obligations which, except in the event of the market price always ruling in officer.
